COBBLE COTTAGE GARDENS

NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN

Early Spring, 1926

Since I have been playing with a garden, I have grown Iris. The first one, I think, must have been Major. It was just an Iris—one of those prized but nondescript contributions from a friend. I didn't know its name—didn't know it had a name; but its rich, early color gave it an identity to which a name could then have added nothing.

Later—not so many years ago—I opened my eyes to Iris. Now everything is different. Specific identity is important—Major is labeled. With the lid of winter still clamped down hard, I am making lists and things—paper gardening. I find myself reaching out for the experiences, the preferences, the raptures, the fine discriminations, even the well-fought prejudices, of others who have opened their eyes to the Iris.

Do you want to know, as I do, what the other fellow has and wants and why? Here, then, without vainglory, for I am but a beginner, is my Iris list. Friends have asked for it, as I have asked for theirs. It may be a means to new Iris-loving friends. It may help me to enrich my own Iris experiences. Selfishly, it is done into print.

Unfortunately, my home is 20 miles from Cobble Cottage—the humble summer “camp” where we play at housekeeping and gardening. When this cobbly place had been tentatively built (it will never, I think, be quite finished), we began to plant things—chief among them, Iris. If you should plan passing this way at Iris blooming-time, drop me a line, and if the crass affairs of business haven't got me chained to an overburdened desk, we might manage to get out to see how some of the choice ones do. Distance barring that, the mails still move, and I'd chuck the crass matters 'most any time to swap a few lines of my pet irrationality.

Sincerely,

Member, A. I. S.
